Justice Stanley Mosk served California for more than half of the 20th century. His remarkable life of service ended on June 19, 2001. In the years that have passed since his death, lasting memories of the man he was—the scholar, the judge, and the public servant—have been expressed in the words of his family, friends, and colleagues.

A memorable man, Justice Mosk was also a man of memories. His writings show that he treasured life. That he also treasured his own life is clear: Because he cared for the words and objects that marked his life's passages, they remain today, to inform us and increase our appreciation of this great man and the time in which he lived.

Born in San Antonio, Texas, in 1912, Stanley Mosk received his primary and secondary education in the public schools of Rockford, Illinois. His involvement in community service developed early. Among his records is a certificate recording his membership in the American Tree Association, awarded because he had, "as a good citizen, planted a tree." A fledgling journalist, he co-edited his high school newspaper and represented Rockford in the annual Illinois High School Press Conference. He was a member of the school's championship debate team. An athlete as well as a scholar, he played baseball during his high school years and covered the football and basketball seasons for the school paper.

Mosk received a bachelor of philosophy degree from the University of Chicago, Division of the Social Sciences, in June 1933. He continued his education at Southwestern University School of Law and was admitted to the practice of law in California in 1935.

His life of public service began with his appointment to the staff of Governor Culbert L. Olson in 1939. He served in the cabinet as legal advisor and later as executive secretary. In 1943 he was appointed to the superior court in Los Angeles. He resigned his judgeship to serve in the U.S. Army during World War II. At the conclusion of his military service, he returned to the bench, remaining until his successful campaign for Attorney General. He won the 1958 election for that office by a margin of more than one million votes, the largest in any contest in the United States that year.

In his nearly six years as Attorney General, Mosk issued approximately 2,000 written opinions in matters ranging from water rights to voting rights. He is remembered for his strong stand in favor of permitting an African-American golfer, Charlie Sifford, to participate in a PGA tournament, thus effectively ending the sport's racial restrictions. Among his many constructive proposals in the field of law enforcement was the establishment of the Commission on Peace Officers' Standards and Training.

Justice Mosk was appointed to the California Supreme Court in September 1964 and served until his death in June 2001. He was at all times an esteemed colleague, a legal scholar of the highest order, and a seeker of just and workable solutions. He authored more than 1,400 opinions in matters as varied as the use of racial quotas as a basis for admission to medical school (the Bakke decision); the ability of disabled parents to retain custody of their children; the requirement that physicians disclose treatment options and risks to their patients (doctrine of informed consent); and the holding that journalists cannot be jailed for contempt of court for refusing to give prosecutors unpublished material.

Justice Mosk served California for more than 60 years. His participation in public policy development and judicial decision making is unparalleled in the history of the state. His life and work remain models of service and excellence, and his memory will be honored for many years to come. ◀
